Schools & Communities First (Yes on 15) Presentation:
James Chiong introduced Larry Grisolano, who provided an update on the Yes on 15 initiative. This is expected to be a fight with opposition from corporate interests. People feel more risk averse in a crisis. However, there is an undercurrent of feeling that large corporations have done well, while small business, schools and communities have suffered. People have been able to successfully link the current health crisis to the consequences of underfunding community services, including healthcare. Tax fairness has been the number one draw. People are also supportive of investing in education. Additionally, the support of essential workers has increased. We need to define the discussion and not allow detractors to move the conversation. Ramses and James reported on current plans and program. There will be trainings on Aug. 4 and 8 where all E-Board members were requested to sign-up.
