Working people, including SEIU members, their families and communities are directly and too often disproportionately affected by the threats of air and water pollution, climate change, and extreme weather events.

As SEIU members know well from their own communities, climate change is real and poses significant threats to people's health and livelihood, and disproportionately affects working people, the poor and people of color.

- Power plants are responsible for about 25% of the climate pollution that harms the health of our families, clogs the air with smog, and results in extremely-hot summers and dangerous floods, hurricanes, fires, and droughts.
- The Biden Administration's EPA has proposed a plan that will slash carbon pollution generated by these plants by 617 million metric tons by 2042—as much as taking 134 million cars off the road! The rule faces stiff opposition from corporate polluters who do not care that climate change is disproportionately harming black and brown communities.
